Best for: ages 3–6, preschool to early primary.

Read-aloud time: 5–8 minutes.

Themes: friendship, feeling different, shyness, courage, kindness, patience, belonging.

Materials: the book, a red ball or soft toy, coloring page, invitation cards, certificate.

Before reading

Ask one gentle question. Do not force personal sharing.

- Have you ever watched other children play and felt unsure how to join?
- What helps you feel safe when something feels new?
- What could a kind friend do for someone who feels shy?

During reading

Pause at these story moments.

- When Yok watches from far away: What might Yok be feeling in her body?
- When the red ball rolls to Yok: Is this moment scary, exciting, or both?
- When Tom says, “Want to play?”: How does Tom make joining in easier?
- When Yok asks others to play: What tiny brave step did Yok take?

After reading

Choose one quick follow-up.

1. Say it: Practice a friendly sentence: “Want to play?”
2. Show it: Make a shy face, then a brave smile.
3. Try it: Roll a ball gently to a partner and wait for a turn.
4. Celebrate it: Give each child a Tiny Brave Step certificate.

Parent Conversation Card

After the Story: Talk About Tiny Brave Steps

Ask gently

1. What made Yok feel nervous?
2. What helped Yok feel safe?
3. What did Tom do that was kind?
4. Why do you think Rabbit mattered to Yok?
5. What is one tiny brave step you could try this week?

Practice together

Take turns saying one friendly sentence. A whisper is still a try.

- | | |
|--------------------------|-------------------------------|
| ▪ Want to play? | ▪ Can I show you my toy? |
| ▪ Can I sit with you? | ▪ Can I roll the ball to you? |
| ▪ Would you like a turn? | ▪ I feel shy, but I can try. |

Home activity: Put a soft toy, ball, or small comfort object nearby. Ask your child to practice one small invitation while holding the object. Then switch roles and let the grown-up be the shy one.

Friendship Invitation Cards

Cut out the cards. Practice one friendly sentence at a time.

A child may point to a card instead of speaking. That still counts as a brave step.

Want to play?

Can I sit with you?

Would you like a turn?

Can I roll the ball to you?

Do you want to build together?

Can I help?

Thank you for waiting.

I feel shy, but I can try.

May I join in?

Adult tip: Model the sentence first. Then invite the child to echo, whisper, point, or act it out. The goal is confidence, not performance.
